Pasture hope for saltland grazing

A robust salt-tolerant annual pasture legume suited to marginal grazing land in southern Australia could throw a lifeline to landowners struggling with saline and waterlogged soils.

A single messina (Melilotus siculus) cultivar has been identified for limited commercial release after extensive trials of this novel annual Mediterranean pasture legume by the South Australian Research and Development Institute (SARDI) and Department of Agriculture and Food Western Australia (DAFWA). For more information, ask for a brochure at your local North West Ag store.

North West Ag have placed a forecast for the 2017 Autumn. If you are interested in ordering some seed then please call your local store.

Our People

Staff are integral to your experience at North West Ag Services. Here we give you the opportunity to meet and learn a little more about the people at North West Ag.

Dan Fox

Position: Customer Service Officer
Location: Warracknabeal

Dan joined the North West Ag team full time in February this year, after four weeks work experience within the North West Ag and Agrivison group, familiarising himself with a number of aspects of the business.

Dan holds an Advanced Diploma of Agriculture and a Diploma of Agronomy after studying at Longerenong College for two years.

When not serving customers at North West Ag, Dan spends time helping out at his family farm at Goschen. He enjoys all things outdoors, including riding motorbikes and water sports.

Currently growers in the Warracknabeal district have been forced to just fence line spraying after the rain last week, holding up any spraying activity in paddocks. Growers are also monitoring crops for disease and insects.
